August 2016

Volume 11

It is back to school time with its myriad of checklists and questions. There may be one question on that checklist that is easy to answer. Is living near learning important to the home buying decision? The answer is a resounding YES! Living near a school(s) known for their excellence can and should play a large part in that decision. The reason is simple whether you have children or not. Of course, a desirable school district is great for your own family but should you have decide to sell your home, it is also terrific for the resale value. For more information about those back to school home buying questions, call a Realtor who knows. That Realtor is Janice Busovne!
