COVID-19

Has stopped the world. Over just a few weeks, the virus spoke loudly and limited nearly every aspect of our lives. Everyone has felt it, yet mothers, used to their nurturing role, have had to turn back time. In addition to their other demanding roles, they have had to add teacher, caregiver, volunteer, and more.

This month, in honor of Mother's Day, I am profiling two clients who have had to find the calm amid the storm.

For Laurie Koszuta, a registered nurse and freelance writer, life during the pandemic means increasing creativity to decrease depression for her elderly parents. "My parents live locally, although they are in two different places," Koszuta said. "I had to figure out a way to communicate with both parents while they are on lockdown."

Allyson Dutton, the owner of Cottonwood Company, a gift and accessory store located in Niceville, had to find a way to stay in business after she had to close.
